

Are you worried about a young person?

Trigger warning – this booklet discusses suicidal feelings

If you are worried someone is thinking about suicide, don't be afraid to ask them straight out. This will not put the thought in their head.

What makes someone think of suicide?

We can all feel overwhelmed at different times in our lives, and we all deal with life experiences and challenges in different ways. Having suicidal thoughts is more common than we think and there are many reasons why someone may feel this way, but sometimes we have suicidal thoughts and feelings for no reason at all.

It's important to remind ourselves that thoughts and feelings about suicide or self harm do not have to be acted out.

These feelings have been described as experiencing a sort of tunnel vision and when in the middle of a crisis someone can believe that suicide is the only way out.

Research shows that many attempted suicides are impulsive acts during a time of crisis, so spotting the signs early is important, being direct and asking them about suicide will not put the idea in their head. But being supportive can help them see things more clearly and realise there are other options out there. It also allows time for the negative feelings to pass.

'You don't seem your usual self... tell me what's wrong?'

'You've had a lot going on recently...how are you feeling?'

'You look like something's worrying you?
I want to help...'

'If you can't talk to me, who else could you talk to?'

What to look out for

Spotting some of the signs

- Talking about feeling useless or that people would be better off without them
- Not wanting to do the things they usually enjoy
- Not wanting to be around family and friends
- Increased alcohol or drugs use (including prescription drugs)
- Being more angry or distant than usual
- Changes in sleep patterns and eating habits
- Neglecting themselves and not caring about their appearance
- Saying 'goodbye' to friends and family as if they won't see them again
- Giving things away, especially items important to them
- Suddenly seem calm or happy after they've been really low
- Writing, drawing or talking about death or suicide
(even in a joking way)
- Searching the internet about suicide or methods
- Having a suicide plan
- Saying they hear voices telling them to hurt themselves
(in this case make a GP appointment, take them to the Emergency Dept or contact emergency services).

Ask someone you trust (family member, teacher) if they have noticed anything different, but be sensitive about what you share.

What can increase the risk?

Although anyone can have suicidal thoughts and at any time in their life, some things increase the risk of young people taking their own life, these include:

- Previous suicide attempts
- Having a low mood that lasts for a long time
- Having an eating disorder where the control of how much food they eat is used to cope
- The loss of someone close (especially by suicide) or loss of a pet
- Being a victim of bullying or violence
- Having no real friends
- Being pressured or embarrassed on social media
- Struggling with their sexuality or gender identity
- Having feelings of guilt or under too much pressure to succeed
- Misusing alcohol or drugs (increases risk taking)
- Important life changes (such as break-ups, living situation)
- Experience of trauma and abuse
- Having a serious or physical illness
- Those who act on impulse

Self-harm with injury

Self-harm with injury is mentioned as a possible warning sign, but self-harm is often a way of coping and does not in itself mean they have suicidal thoughts or intention.

Visit www.selfharm.co.uk for more information.

How can I help?

Talk to them

'You can talk to me about anything, I want to help'

Supporting someone who's having suicidal thoughts is hard. It's both physically and emotionally exhausting.

You need to take care of yourself and know where to go for support and advice (see pages 17-18) also make sure that you have someone to talk to. You may feel uncomfortable talking about suicidal feelings and may not know what to say or how to start the conversation, this is normal.

If you are supporting a friend, realise that most people who feel suicidal actually hope someone will help them talk to their family or carer.

'What if I were to help you have the conversation with your...?'

'Would you allow me to explain it to them?'

'Did something happen to make you feel this way?'

'I'm really sad to hear you're feeling like this, how can I help?'

Show you care

Show you care: Ask if you can give them a hug or hold their hand. See things from their point of view and believe in their pain.

Have patience: They may not tell you everything straight away.

Don't fill the silence: You may find yourself asking unimportant questions.

Listen, listen, listen: You don't need to have answers but listening shows that you care.

Keep their hopes up: Try to make them feel better about themselves; share things you like about them, their qualities, their skills, why they are important and remind them of positive things to look forward to (in the near future). If they mention something they care about (a pet, sibling, sport, place) try to keep this positive connection going.

Reassure them: 1 in 4 people experience these thoughts and feelings so they are not alone, let them know it's ok to talk or cry. If they cry, just sit with them.

Feelings will pass: Try to agree what they can do to keep themselves safe right now (pages 11 & 12). This will put some time between harming thoughts and any actions, it will allow the feelings to pass, once things are calmer you can work together to find different solutions.

Sometimes you just have to ask...

'How are you coping since...?'

'If you could change anything right now, what would it be?'

'Things sound tough...can you tell me more?'

'Are you thinking about suicide?'

'What has stopped you giving in to these thoughts?'

'Do you have a suicide plan?'

By using the word suicide, you are showing the young person that it's okay to talk to you about their feelings no matter how difficult they are. You will not be giving them ideas.

What if they say 'yes'?

Do not judge or dismiss them and try to stay calm.

Sometimes it may be easier for them to write down or draw how they are feeling so use whatever works best for them. Even having a hot drink to hold can be a good distraction while talking.

'Do you have what you need to carry out your plan?' (items to use, place to go)

'Do you know when you would do it?' (time)

'Do you plan on taking your own life?'

If they are at immediate risk or need urgent medical treatment go to your nearest Emergency Department or call 999

If you feel they are in crisis and have a suicide plan they are going to act on, talk to someone straight away and seek help (see pages 17 - 18).

Reassure them ★

*'You are not alone in this.
I'm here for you.'*

*'Things must be so painful for you to feel like there's no other way out.
But I care for you and want to help'*

*'It's hard and scary to talk about suicide but take your time,
I will listen.'*

'I need extra help, someone who can help you keep safe'

*"You may not believe it now,
but these feelings will change."*

Try to avoid . . .

Changing the subject
(they may feel unheard)

Saying 'man up' 'you'll get over it'
(they may feel dismissed)

Getting too emotional
(they may feel guilty for upsetting you)

Saying 'don't be doing anything silly' etc
(they could feel criticised)

Fixing the problem
(they may feel they have no control)

Dismissing their emotional pain
(they may feel more alone)

Blaming yourself!

What to do in an emergency

“I really want you to stay with us, we need some help”

If they are at immediate risk or need urgent medical treatment go to your nearest Emergency Department (A&E) or call 999

If you feel the situation is at crisis or the young person has a suicide plan, and they are going to act on it, talk to someone straight away and seek help.

Contact the CAMHS ReACH team (crisis team).

A parent/carer or professional can ring for advice and support in a crisis, the young person can do it themselves if they are over 16.

This is available between 9am – 8pm, seven days a week.

Tel: 01977 735865

If the young person is over 18yrs Tel: 01924 316900

Contact your GP (there is an out-of-hours service) or NHS 111

Be clear and tell them what is happening and why you are worried. The people answering these calls are friendly and are used to helping people talk about difficult things.

- Stay with them until support arrives or the situation is calmer
- Remove any obvious means of suicide or harm (rope, belts, tablets, sharp objects etc)
- Try to stay calm and re-assure them you are staying with them and that you care
- Keep them talking
- Keep yourself safe

Practical help

Ways to help them stay safe for now and in the future

If they are not at immediate risk, ring your GP or contact the Children and Adolescent Mental Health Service (CAMHS) single point of access (SPA) for advice as soon as possible.

This is available 9:00am – 5:00pm Monday – Friday

Tel: 01977 735865

If the young person is over 18 contact the adult single point of access (SPA). Tel: 01924 316900

- Re-assure them, stay with them, and keep them talking
- Agree with them how they can keep safe right now (such as remove any items that may be used for harm and staying away from unsafe or isolated places)
- Agree what can be put in place to help now and in the future
- Support them to identify people who they would talk to (a family member, a trusted person in school, college, university or at work, a GP or helpline). Make a list of these contact numbers and websites so the young person can access support 24/7 (see pages 17-18) and encourage them to keep a copy in their room and numbers in their phone, so they know what to do if the strong feelings return
- Try out some of the coping techniques with them. These are found on the support websites on (pages 17-18)

All the above can be used as part of the safety net (safety plan) found on page 14.

When they are calmer, encourage them to make a feel good box containing items with happy memories, pens and a sketch or puzzle book, uplifting music playlist, a stress ball/ fidget board, something nice to smell and taste, let them make it personal. This can help them get through a difficult day or night.

Offer to support any initial contact with services whether they are face-to-face or online. You can also request for the Samaritans to ring the young person, but you will need their permission first.

"If we make an appointment with the GP and I take you, would you tell them how you're feeling?"

Creating a safety net

A safety net (or plan) is there to help 'catch' the young person if they start to struggle, it will help put things in place so they can get the right support at the right time.

It is easier to put together a safety net when they are not in crisis, but it's never too late to start one. You may need to guide them, but the young person needs to make it their own and feel in control of what is in it.

This may include:

- Not being alone
- Listing people and helplines they will talk to (maybe explore how to start those conversations)
- Using specific distractions or coping strategies
- Removing certain items from their room or house
- Using the 'feel good box'

Look after yourself

Supporting someone who is having suicidal thoughts is hard!

If you are supporting a friend talk to their parent or a trusted adult. Do not try to support them by yourself.

- Ensure you have someone you trust who you can talk to
- Talk to your GP about talking therapies for yourself
- Take time out
- Join a local or national support group
- Access websites and services that can support you as well
